HOW TO COOK SUMMER VEGETABLES

(By Marian Harland)

In no other country I have ever risited-and I have been in many of them-is there the wealth and variety of vegetables for table use we have in this land. The more shame to us Cooking vegetables is like a good Every woman thinks she knows how to do them and as a result they are seldom well done. At how many ta-bles do we have to eat half-cooked or overcooked vegetables, ill drained and watery, unseasoned or poorly seaned, the kindly fruits of the earth ruined in their preparation.

Even the woman who does under stand how to cook vegetables is very likely to drift into the habit of mo-notony. I visit one place in the pring when asparagus is in season, I weary of that delicious vegetable because of the way in which it is served. The reason for it is rief; it is cut in the big garden un-er the dining room windows and it always sent to the table on toast with a cream sauce. At first I encek or less I wish the cook would something different with it.

On the centrary, for the selection of the Shenandoah as a site for the present unique proj-ect was the opportunity the site afforded for operations in a time-tried 'cavalry country" and the inspiration that would presumably be imparted alike to officers and men by the historic associations of the territory sur rounding Winchester-Sheridan's goal To carry out the ambitious plans which have been made for the forthcoming experiments with our cavalry of land and it was desirable that as little as possible of this tract be un-der cultivation and that it be bi-sected by as few fences as possible. Grow ing crops would be destroyed by the evolutions of the troops and fences would have to be destroyed in order to permit of the free movement of the cavalry and each of these contingencies would mean considerable expense to Uincle Sam. These qualifi cation are filled admirably by the site chosen near Winchester, There is yet another reason for hav ng selected the Valley of Virginia as rendezvous for the pick of the American cavalry, and this is found in its geographical position. When the of icials of the War Department decid d that they must assemble 1800 cavalrymen in order to make tests and work out problems, they were brought to realize that our military forces are that she did not weep. She seemed ter to assemble a considerable force ter to assemble a considerable force like one stunned or dazed. Just be of one given class of fighters. Esso scattered that it is no easy matpecially is this true of the cavalry, detachments of the mounted force ing distributed more widely in a sense than some other branche sof the service.

When it became apparent that it order to make up the desired comple ment of cavalry, troops must be sum moned from points as widely separated as Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, and Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, it was manifest that a common meeting ground should be selected that would, so to speak. "split the difference." This was the more desirable because it had previously been determined that the respective troops detailed for this duty should march-or shall we say, ride-to the instruction camp. glance at the map will show that the Shenandoah Valley occupies a position sufficiently central in the Atlantic coast region to render it an acceptable compromise. Furthermore, it is only a few hours' journey by rail from the national capital and this will facilitate the attendance of distinguished spectators. The secretary of war and Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the army are counted upon to make several visits to the camp during the eight or was the notice that he had been sent nine weeks occupied by the martial program and there is a probability that President Wilson will make this improvised cavalry post the destina-tion of a "week-end" automobile tour.
